The backwater from the Missouri river reaches almost to this point and the Kaw has been in a steady rise for the past three or four days. A number of large sand piles near the river bank have been washed away and Enright Bros. have been busy for the past day or two removing sand to higher ground. Some of the residents of North Argentine fear that the water will get as high as it did several years ago and are preparing for the worst.

ism and Bankrupt the City Treasury.

Developments of yesterday indicate that little more than the obsequies remain for the Kansas City election bill, now pending in the lower house of the general as-sembly, and then it will be heard of no more. It is quite probable that the so-called Cleary police bill will follow to the grave close behind the election measure. But that the Cardwell bill, which revives Owsleyism in this city, is dead or dying is little doubted, No one claims it. If the bill has an author he is not too proud of his handlwork to keep his identity carefully concealed. The representative who introduced it, Cardwell-William Orlando Cardwell-has disavowed it. He introduced it, he says, at the request of a Kansas City politician, "but don't blame me!" If Cardwell does not father it, the chances are that no other Jackson county legislator will, and the bill is altogether likely to drop into oblivion without a kindly word. All this is the result of public sentiment in Kansas City, which will not submit to ballothox stuffing. At a time when the suspicions of the people were thought to be slumbering, the state house gang sprang the conspiracy to re-enact the old recorder of voters law for Kansas City and St. Louis. By this law one man appointed by the governor has absolute control of the election machinery of each city. This was too flagrant to be indorsed even by a Democratic caucus. The rank and file rebelled and a compromise was effected for St. Louis, by which the governor names all three election commispay of the patroimen the task of drawing up the bill was assigned to a Stephens politician. There were then incorporated the vicious features designed to forever kill home rule. Then went Arthur Chapman down to Jefferson City. Besides raising the salaries from 20 to 100 per cent, a penaity clause was added laying an alderman who opposed the police appropriation liable to a fine of $1,000. Chapman compromised the bill so far that a tip was given the police department to keep Chapman confined, if anything was to be accomplished.

Senator Young and Representative Cleary met yesterday afternoon for the purpose of preparing a substitute for the bill which both could support. Mr. Cleary refused to sanction a large increase in salary and insisted that the excise provisions must be eliminated. Mr. Young would not state definitely his position. He agreed, however, to abandon the excise feature and to disregard entirely the Chapman bill. The senator seemed timid about committing himself, either for or against the bill.

To a reporter for The Journal Representative Cleary stated, after the conference with Senator Young, that unless the entire Democratic delegation came out positively for a police bill he was ready to throw up the whole matter. He said that an attempt was evidently being made by some to shirk responsibility. For his part he would not have the bill shouldered upon him alone.

If the demands were made reasonable—possibly more patrolmen with a slight increase in salary—he might agree to support the bill.

"But I will have nothing to do with it unless every Democrat on the Kansas City rease in salary—he might agree to support the bill.

"But I will have nothing to do with it unless every Democrat on the Kansas City delegation favors it. I am positively against the excise feature, and I am against the Chapman penalty clause for the reason—that if the excise feature, and I am against the Chapman penalty clause for the reason—that if the city hasn't the revenue, police salaries cainnot be appropriated."

Mr. Cleary said that he would only agree to the engrossment of the bill with the salaries as originally provided, with the exception of the signal operators, who should receive $720 instead of $300 a year, and the hostiers $500 instead of $300 a year, and the hostiers $500 instead of $340. He also thought the bill, when engrossed, would provide for two drivers at each station at a salary of $720 a year. The bill also provides that the department may increase the number of patrolmen to one for every thousand inhabitants. Following is the schedule of salaries:

Review of "The Guide Post to Success," by Lola Berry, Scarritt school, room 8, Kansas City, Mo.

'Tis a pleasant task to talk about the merits of "The Guide Post to Success," but it would be difficult to express them in 300 words. It is a book that should be in every household, both for young and old. Even the first topic is a Guide Post itself, while each character is an example for every schoolboy and girl in the land. The editor it speaks of is indeed a model for every boy. He began while in school to be a man, and to make himself wanted, and when he grew to manhood he was in demand more than ever. This would be a grand world if two-thirds of the men would be like him. It should be everyone's motto to live within their means, but too many, I fear, live beyond them. It takes pluck and grit to be successful in this world. The guide book tells us that to be successful we must be cheerful, truthful, persevering, and have pluck and grit. We must keep our machines in order, and to do this we must be regular. If we do not, we are soon out of order and discouraged. It is not hard to tear down all of our hopes, but if we wish to be happy we must do four things, namely: be strong, that is, have pluck and grit, be truthful, read good books, and attend church. All this the Guide Book tells us. Where could we find better advice?

I think if there were more guide posts and fewer dime novels used, there would be less use for the workhouse and other places of that sort. Every child's motto should be, "I-will be a man and the world shall want no longer. It has wanted too long already."

some game I divided with them, and forth with was invited to a feast of their own providing. We sat around a big wooden dish, in which was something that looked like frogs' legs, but frogs so gigantic that I knew it was something else. It required some courage to cut this dish, but hunger gives a man stamina of a certain kind, so I shut my eyes and began the feast. The article was not so bad as it appeared. It tasted like crab, and some of it had the consistence of the rubber rings which babies chew on. Altogether, it was not to be despised, combining food with exercise. "It was sea spider, so the natives told me were going out on the following morning to fish for more, I persuaded them to take me with them. Half of the excitement of fishing here was getting affoat. outfit which was a cross between a sharkand a cod line. Presently the men began halling in rock cod, using the little candletish for bait. There is a curious thing about Alaskans. This little fish, which they eat, if they are so disposed; or, if they want a light, they fasten a fish between

"My time was coming, however; I had boat lifted I felt a sharp jerk, which deceived me. But once, when the boat rose on a big wave, my line did not give and I shouted to the Indian next to me that I was foul. He took the line, gave a tremendous jerk and received one in return; then, bracing himself back, he began to pull and scream: then all hands screamed, and I understood that a sea spider had the line and also the bottom. I expected every minute to see the canoe go over as the men went from side to side, now forcing the rail down so that the water poured in, then slacking off so suddenly that they fell in a heap. Finally, after they had screamed themselves out of breath and settled conflicts of opinion, they hauled in the slack inch by inch, as the canoe sank in the hollow of a wave, then holding on as a big ground swell would raise her.

"This plan seemed certain either to lift

"There was something so uncanny about the creature that I confess it demoralized me; but the natives, who probably had caught great numbers, struck at it right and left, cutting off the tentacles with their knives and hatchets, trying to save such portions as those I had dined upon the day before—the thought of which gave me a thrill of horror. It was fifteen minutes before they had the life hammered out of the frightful creature, and then it was a question who had won.

"The canoe was now haif full of water, as a hole had been knocked in the side, which was finally stopped with a piece of skin. It was five miles to camp, but I preferred walking and had the men put me ashore. I got to camp in time to meet them and see the sea spider taken out. It had a spread of nearly twenty-five feet, measuring from the tip of the outstretched tentacles."

man arimed himself with a knife, while a companion held a short-handled case knife between his teeth-movements suggestive of the coming of an enemy. Suddenly one of the crew selzed a sharp boathook, which, after another look, he jabbed into the unknown and invisible. In response, a long tentacle shot into the air and formed a weird interrogation point, then it grasped the pike: then three more appeared creeping insidiously over the edge of the cance, at which the natives struck wildly, some shouting to slack the line, others to haul in.

"In the midst of the confusion the sea spider concluded to come aboard. Torn from the bottom, it had come up easily, then seeing the cance and possibly thinking it a vantage ground, it grasped it and sild over the side, a mass of living, slimy, reddish brown snakes. When they were raised I could see rows of suckers, each of which was a veritable air pump, and as there were seemingly thousands of them, the sucking power of this spider of the sea was apparent.

"Blows were aimed at it whenever opportunity offered, but the weird animal fairly slid over the rail, winding one of its arms around an oar. Its head or body arms around an oar and or the sea was apparent.

the London Leader. Michael Szoery, once a minimum play-leading financier in Budapest, who playmercial and social life of the Hungarian capital, has just been committed for trial

His wife in the old days was a society belle, and her salon was the rendezvous of some of the most exclusive set. Unlucky speculations, however, ruined Szoery, and, deserted by his old friends, he became utterly destitute.

The ex-millionaire became a cabman, while his wife, the ex-society belle, took in needlework to augment their income. Things went on thus until his wife died, when Szoery became desperate and went to the bad.

He became porter in a warehouse, then a barrel organ grinder, next a crossing sweeper, and finally a burglar. He may shortly be a convict. His wife in the old days was a society
